.NET, .PNG, .3DS, .BLEND, and .OBJ. Products in the Autodesk CAD group cover a wide range of tasks including architectural visualization, construction visualization, engineering visualization, and product visualization. For information on .NET, .PNG, .3DS, .BLEND, and .OBJ file formats and other Autodesk file types, see Autodesk Products and File Formats . There is also a section on their Mac Studio Products. The Autodesk Developer Center provides links to the various Autodesk products, including .NET, .PNG, .3DS, .BLEND, and .OBJ file formats and other Autodesk file types, as well as tutorials, videos, articles, and community information. Autodesk Inc. used Macs for the first four years of the commercial release of AutoCAD before switching to Windows in 1992, following the introduction of AutoCAD version 2. As of version 3.0, AutoCAD was released for the Mac in 1984. Microsoft, however, didn't release AutoCAD for the Mac until version 3.5, in 1994. Released on October 24, 1994, AutoCAD 3.5 was the first version of AutoCAD to be released for the Mac in ten years. Programming languages for the Mac For computer programming in AutoCAD, Microsoft released two versions of AutoLISP for the Mac, AutoCAD/MacLISP and AutoCAD 2000, which support the programming of AutoCAD. AutoCAD for Mac introduced a built-in version of BASIC called AutoLISP, which runs on the Mac's native machine language, at the time known as 68K and PowerPC. It supports the creation of both the user interface and the user-defined drawing commands of AutoCAD. The .NET Framework was introduced in August 2000 to bring the .NET standard to the Mac in AutoCAD, along with the first release of AutoCAD for the Mac. AutoCAD.NET, AutoCAD's native version of .NET programming, was released for the Mac in AutoCAD 2005. AutoCAD.NET in later versions allows 82157476af
